REMARKS ORDERED PRINTED

On motion of Senator Eckhardt and by unanimous consent, the remarks by Senators Huffman, Hinojosa, and Eckhardt regarding CSSB 20 were ordered reduced to writing and printed in the Senate Journal as follows:

President: Thank you. Senator Hinojosa, for what purpose?

Senator Hinojosa: Will the Senator yield for some questions?

President: Do you yield?

Senator Huffman: Of course.

Senator Hinojosa: Thank you, Mr. President. Just a clarification, a prosecutor will not lose a prosecutor discretion whether or not to file a criminal case against someone accused of a crime?

Senator Huffman: The prosecutor always has some discretion in individualized cases or individual cases on whether to prosecute. They make the determination whether there is probable cause, whether they believe they could prove the case to a judge or a jury beyond a reasonable doubt, whether they think they could have the evidence available. So, lots of reasons why a prosecutor may use their discretion and decline prosecution. That is not what this bill is aiming at. This bill is aiming at those that have policies that, whether it's direct or indirect, that create an across the board refusal to prosecute a class or a type of offense. Like we've seen some that don't prosecute theft under $750 or, that's just an example, but that type of example. Whereas you could have a prosecutor who encountered a case where someone shoplifted, you know, they weren't sure, you know, who had actually seen them do it. The evidence wasn't that clear, so they may use their discretion and choose not to prosecute. Those are two totally different things.

Senator Hinojosa: So, I assume, and just from reading the bill, that you are actually targeting where a prosecutor has a blank policy of not prosecuting a certain type of crime, if you will.

Senator Huffman: Correct. And that would include their policies that they pass on to their employees, so the employees would be, you know, covered as well if they instruct their employees not to prosecute a certain class. I have worked with the prosecutors to try to hone this language down, I think trying to make my intentions very clear. It's these policies that we see that are wrong when, and it's not necessarily individualized cases where a prosecutor uses their discretion to make a decision.

Senator Hinojosa: And that's my main concern, and that is that we're not reducing or taking away the discretion of a prosecutor. The prosecutor has so many criminal cases, they may end up dismissing for numerous reasons. Whether it's a weak case or whether there are special circumstances that apply to that case, you are not targeting those type of decisions.

Senator Huffman: Right. And usually those decisions come about after the process has been put into place, so there, maybe prosecution has started, whether even an arrest has started and the prosecutor reviews the evidence and thinks we can't go any further than this. But these prosecutors that say they're not going to prosecute certain crimes so the police officers don't even bother to arrest are the type of situations that we are trying to avoid. And those prosecutors that engage in that type of behavior, under the bill, should be subject to removal under current law.

Senator Hinojosa: And as you well know, elections for district attorney, for example, are partisan elections. So, this would apply to Democrats or Republicans.

Senator Huffman: Absolutely. Yes, Sir.

Senator Hinojosa: If a Republican prosecutor says, well, I don't want to prosecute this type or class of crimes as a blanket policy, this bill would apply to that also.

Senator Huffman: It applies to Democrats and Republicans, yes.

Senator Hinojosa: And one more point, and that is this bill would not prohibit a prosecutor from having any internal policy and processing certain types of cases, for capital murder cases, for example, so that he would be free to discuss whatever internal policies they may have as long as they are not a blanket policy against certain types of a—

Senator Huffman: Right. Just so they are not across the board policies that would apply to every person charged with a specific offense, yes.

Senator Hinojosa: And I know you have worked with the district attorney association and county attorney association on trying to hone down and narrow the language of this bill to make sure that we're not interfering in any which way with the prosecution's discretion in prosecuting crime in the State of Texas.

Senator Huffman: That has been my goal. Yes, Sir.

Senator Hinojosa: Thank you, Senator Huffman, for your information.

Senator Huffman: Thank you, Senator Hinojosa.

President: Thank you, Senator. Senator Eckhardt, what purpose?

Senator Eckhardt: To ask questions of the author.

President: Do you yield?

Senator Huffman: Yes.

Senator Eckhardt: Senator Huffman, I just want to ask some quick questions to get some clarity with regard to policy versus practice of a prosecuting attorney.

Senator Huffman: Okay.

Senator Eckhardt: So, how will your bill affect the ability of a prosecutor's office to have a practice of offering deferred adjudication for certain classes of crimes?

Senator Huffman: I think deferred adjudication would anticipate that there would be a prosecution in place, so that would not be a denial of prosecuting a class of offenses, it would just be that was the punishment that the prosecutor offered in the form of a plea bargain, which there would still be a prosecution.

Senator Eckhardt: For those of our colleagues who are not aware of how deferred adjudication works, the defendant signs an admission in advance in return for a course of conduct that if they follow it, a dismissal comes after a certain period of time. Correct?

Senator Huffman: Correct. After a finding or an admission of guilt, not necessarily, there would not be a finding of guilt but an admission of guilt, or no contest in rare cases, but sometimes.

Senator Eckhardt: So, it's not your intention that this bill would be able to, would prevent a prosecutor's office from having a practice of offering deferred adjudication for specific levels of offense?

Senator Huffman: I think a deferred adjudication is a prosecution.

Senator Eckhardt: How would your bill affect a prosecutor's office having a practice of resolving certain classes without prosecution, a complete diversion into treatment out of the court system?

Senator Huffman: I think if there was, again, a diversion program still, the type I'm familiar with, maybe you're talking about something different, but I'm talking, I'm thinking of a diversion program where defendants who have been arrested go through the system, go before a judge, or placed into a program, they're supervised, expected to participate whether it be in rehab classes or whatever it is, community service, maybe different things they have to participate in. And upon successful completion, then their case is dismissed. That to me is still where the prosecutor has taken active steps to prosecute. Again, using their discretion on how they want to handle certain cases. So, the police know that they can arrest an individual, bring them before the court, and the person may be placed into a pre-trial diversion program. That's not the same as a prosecutor refusing to prosecute a class of offense by policy, either direct or implied.

Senator Eckhardt: And so, I appreciate this clarification. Of course, there are jail diversion programs and then there are prosecution diversion programs like sobering centers, for instance, where an offender is taken to a sobering center as an alternative to being taken to central booking to start the process of prosecution. Is it your intention that this bill would prevent the operation of sobering centers or other prosecution diversion mechanisms for substance use disorder?

Senator Huffman: I'm not going to speak to that because I don't know specifically the programs that you're talking about. I think if a prosecutor said, no, we're not going to file any charges on someone with drugs, we're just going to send them to a sobering center, then they are probably in violation of the law. But, you know, a citizen would have to file a complaint. It'd go through the system and maybe it would be determined that they weren't. I don't know. That would be for the system to decide. But I think you're kind of getting in a gray area there. And I think the intent of the legislation is clear. We don't want prosecutors saying, I'm not prosecuting that crime, I don't like that crime, we don't want to prosecute that crime in this county or this city, or whatever it is. That's the intent of the legislation. So, I think if prosecutors try to be cute about it and think, well, we'll pretend like we're, you know, we're just sending them somewhere but we're really not prosecuting. Then someone may file a complaint and then we'll let the courts decide if they have actually violated the legislation or the law.

Senator Eckhardt: Thank you for answering my questions—

Senator Huffman: Sure.

Senator Eckhardt: —and also Senator Hinojosa's questions, which also clarified my understanding of your intent.

Senator Huffman: Great.

Senator Eckhardt: I would move at this time that Senator Hinojosa's questions and Senator Huffman's answers, as well as mine, are recorded in the Journal for future reference.

REMARKS ORDERED PRINTED

On motion of Senator Blanco and by unanimous consent, the remarks by Senators Blanco and King regarding CSSB 2015 were ordered reduced to writing and printed in the Senate Journal as follows:

President: You're recognized, for what purpose?

Senator Blanco: Questions for the author.

President: Do you yield?

Senator King: Yes, I yield for questions.

Senator Blanco: Thank you, Mr. President. Thank you, Senator King for bringing this bill and for your leadership in promoting energy security for Texas. I do have a couple of questions about legislative intent for this bill. Specifically, as it relates, and you had mentioned it earlier, geothermal. As you know, geothermal energy is, it's a promising form of energy source in our state. It's renewable. And it's also dispatchable. So, under the definition in your bill, would geothermal energy be considered dispatchable?

Senator King: It would. Under SB 3's definition of dispatchable because it is a constant heat source, you drill way down into the ground, you use that heat just like you would be using natural gas to create heat or nuclear energy to create heat. So, geothermal absolutely fits the definition.

Senator Blanco: So, it's safe to, thank you for that, it's safe to say that your bill can and can't promote and incentivize investment in these renewable technologies as it relates specifically to geothermal energy because it's dispatchable.

Senator King: It's dispatchable and therefore technology neutral. The only exception to it is, as I mentioned, is that it has to be something that's under our control not the control of the weather.

Senator Blanco: Great. So, it, so this bill does not explicitly exclude renewable energy sources.

Senator King: It does not target renewable energy sources. What it tries to do is require that at least 50 percent of the generation built January 1st going forward is going to be dispatchable. And per your question, which is an excellent question, geothermal, a coming technology, would certainly fit that definition.

Senator Blanco: Well, Senator King, thank you so much. I think this is a good bill. I think it's going to keep the lights on in Texas. Mr. President, could I move to reduce the exchange between Senator King and myself to writing and placed in the Journal for legislative intent?
