STATEMENT REGARDING SENATE BILL 4

Senator Johnson submitted the following statement regarding SB 4:

I cast my vote in favor of Senate Bill 4 today, but I do so with some reservation. It is bold. It helps people, and for that reason I support it. But it is certainly not conservative. In a time of great political and fiscal uncertainty, prudence counsels us to, at a minimum, view today's action in the full light of its long-term fiscal implications.

As the bill author stated, this $2.7B commitment is permanent. As it will benefit every homeowner hereafter, it will be a budget obligation hereafter. But, as was frequently said on the floor, we have a huge surplus, so maybe this is money we can "give back" (never mind for the moment that we're giving sales tax dollars paid by everyone to replace property tax dollars paid only by homeowners, not renters or businesses) to taxpayers (to some of them, anyway). Yes, we're in a surplus cycle. But we won't always be.

The Texas economy is strong, and I believe it will be for quite some time. Probably. Meanwhile, the current presidential administration seems bent on drastically cutting federal spending for programs that may profoundly affect this state. The result may be that Texas receives far less than the $100B federal dollars upon which we rely to balance our annual state budget.

And when inevitably we enter a budget cycle with a deficit, the people of this state will look to us to run a balanced budget, to uphold the commitments we made today, and still to provide for the social and physical infrastructure that enables all Texans to pursue a better life.

In addition to concerns over future fiscal challenges, SB 4 falls far short of the important objective of making housing in Texas more affordable and attainable. The bill offers appreciable financial benefit to all homeowners, while it does nothing for renters. True, the proposed state budget includes significant funding for tax compression, and the compression will provide financial benefit to landlords along with homeowners. Theoretically, landlords might pass along some of those savings (a proposition rendered less likely by scarcity in the housing market). But as the bill author stated, a homestead exemption gives roughly three times the financial benefit as tax compression. And whereas renters get only compression, homeowners get both. So far this session then, tax relief benefits are slanted 4:1 in favor of homeowners to renters and businesses.

That's OK, so long as we don't declare that we're done. Not every bill should or can attend to every need. But we must address housing availability and affordability broadly, not merely for a subset of Texans. As we consider means to achieve this broader objective, it is appropriate that we keep in mind the scale of what we're doing today with SB 4.

Post script: a couple of matters raised on the Senate floor merit some additional context:

No one, of any age or income, single or married, with kids or without kids, in public school or private school, pays property taxes as tuition. Local school district taxes, along with state tax revenue dedicated to public education, are what we all contribute for the privilege of living in an educated, and therefore civilized, society. None of it represents tuition for anybody. And the civic obligation to contribute to the cost of an educated society is one that does not expire upon paying for a time, or upon paying a certain amount. We do a disservice to our civic health when we suggest otherwise.
